CHAPTER I.—The story opens during a trip of the "Overland Mail" through the Rocky mountains, while efforts are being made to build up the country, "Uncle Billy" Dodge, stage driver, Alfred Vincent, a young man, and Phineas Cadwailer, Introduced. They come across the remains of a missacre. Later at Anthony's station, they find the redskins have carried their destructive work there also.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER II.-Stella Anthony, daughter of Anthony, keeper of station, is in-traduced. The travelers find that An-thony has been killed.

CHAPTER III.—Vincent with letter of introduction to Gov. Stanford is assigned his work in unearthing plans of enemies of railroad, being built. He hears of safe arrival of Stella Anthony in a letter from her.

CHAPTER IV.—Vincent visits town where railroad men are working on road and receives token of esterm from Stella, embodied in a near lunch and a forget-me-not.

must have come in ahead of us—must be here now, and— If I could only get word from Alfred!"

"Shall I telegraph for you?"

CHAPTER V.—"Uncle Billy" arrives in railroad town, meeting Stella. He hears news that desired railroad bill has passed. The old stage driver decides to work close to town in order that he may be able to keep fatherly watch over the young woman.

CHAPTER VI.-Stella receives "Uncle Billy" with kisses for he believes ly" with kisses for he brought her a w hat. She is engaged as a tutor for da Bernard, daughter of hotel land-

CHAPTER VIII.-Phineas Cadwallader, CHAPTER VIII.—Phineas Cadwallader, pushing a railroad opposing Central Pacific, reaches mining town and to Stella boasts of success of his enterprise. She writes to Alfred Vincent of it. Plying his attentions Cadwallader later insults her and she is rescued by Gideon, her father's servant who has protected her for years. In turn he proposes marlage, is rejected, leaves her declaring he will return the sort of a man she will love.

CHAPTER IX.-Vincent "shows up" San Francisco and Washoe road and is praised by governor and heads of Central Pacific. Being known as agent of C. P. he decides to retire to position of a brakeman for a short time.

CHAPTER X.—Stella hears from her lover, Gideon, and of his phenomenal success. Finds letter of importance involving plans of opposition road, "Uncle Billy" returns in terrible suffering from long mountain trip.

CHAPTER XI.-Plot to destroy company's ship Flora is unearthed and in-criminating evidence against Cadwallader on charge of wire tapping is also found, the letters found by Stella being de-ciphered by Brakeman Alfred Vincent, who arrives on scene.

CHAPTER XII - Impending disaster to Central Pacific is averted by protecting the Flora and sending the ship laden with iron for railroad camp.

CHAPTER XIII —Phineas Cadwallader faces prison on charge of wire tapping and has interview with Gov. Stanford, sponsor for Central Pacific. Phineas signs statement, promising that he will enter the governor's cause and the latter tells him of a perfect chain of evidence connecting him with plot to blow up "Flora."

CHAPTER XXII.

A Heart for a Life. In the depressing loneliness of a strange hotel Stella's fears returned, multiplied by the hours they had rested. Impatiently she paced the small room. She had no watch to count the minutes. But that the sun still shone on the mountain above her, avail.' she would have declared it already Where was Uncle Billy? Why hadn't he come to take her to dinner?

Innocent Stella! She knew nothing of Mrs. Grundy's code; suspected no whit of the reason for Uncle Billy's aloofness. In Colfax, under Sally B.'s powerful wing, where Uncle Billy was known and approved, no one would have dared a breath against her. But it was very different in this feverish city. Good women were few. Honest men, toiling for loved ones away, justled the blackleg, the gambler, the man of many aliases; and petticoated vice preyed upon its authors, and surely beset clean hearts as well. A beautiful friendless girl must indeed be hedged by angels if she were to run safely the gantlet of this "wickedest city in the world."

She left her room and wandered about in search of the parlor; came upor it at last-small, stuffy and possessed by several overdressed, bedisinguised women, who stared at her braketiy and openly commented on C. P. a mite; they've got more ment bown," she wrote, "will I marry har. As from a pestilence, she fled to her own corridor again, hesitating before her door. But vanquished by thought of the desolation within, she dropped the key in her pocket and began walking the narrow hall, darker, emptier than her room, but open at either end to human approach. Here the hall boy found her, bringing a message from Uncle Billy to meet him in the parlor. Stella thought of it a little resentfully as she hurried on, recalling the inhospitable occupants. But they were gone; and at sight of Uncle Billy's cheery face she forgot they had ever she would ask no questions.

"Good-bye?" she echoed wondering-"Aren't you going to stay here to-night? Take me in to supper.' He winced before her steady eyes, and lied heroically. "I have a heap to do befo' I'll be ready for the trip home; and I won't have time to se you again. Eat a good suppeh, child, won't you? Have you money to pay for it?"

"Not a two-bit piece. Uncle Billy You pay for me, won't you? And book me, too? I'll have it for you when we get home."

She was surprised by his silence and nervousness. He opened his purse quickly, and forced some money upon her, his embarrassment increasing as he looked furtively through each open door while pressing her hand shut over the coin. "Take that," he whis pered."You must pay yo' own bills, and book yo'self, honey. Don't ask me why!" he added as she opened her lips to speak.

Instantly he was gone, leaving her to puzzle out the matter for herself. But the need for dissembling her relations with Uncle Billy, whom she had known longer than any one living save Gideon, did not dawn upon her.

Supper alone was less an ordeat than she had expected. On her return to her room she met the hall boy and ordered pen and paper. She had barely seated herself to write when a dispatch interrupted her; it was addressed to William Dodge, and was from Alfred at Carson City. "Am detained here. Will be in Colfax on the thirtieth."

In the reaction of relief she wrote a short, almost happy letter to Alfred, sending it to post by the hall boy. The next day they faced homeward. No other passenger shared the box seat with Stella; and leisurely, a little shyly, she told Uncle Billy of her plans for school, and received his advice, heartfelt, if not always wise, At Dutch Flat she stopped to visit an acquaintance, timing her homegoing for Uncle Billy's next trip, hoping vainly that Alfred would be with him. It was indeed a home-coming! Days only she had been away; they seemed weeks. Sally B., Viola, Yic Wah, even the dog, greeted her overpoweringly. Suddenly she realized with a heart-wrench her leaving it

"Here's a letter for you." Sally B. said, when Stella was at last free. "It came yesterday."

She took it, but paled with quick fear when she saw the strange handwriting. She hastened to her room. There was neither date, address, nor signature; but the message was crue!. "Stella Anthony: Alfred Vincent's life is in your hands. Send to the address below within one week after October 30 your written word that you will marry Gideon Ingram, and Vincent shall go free. Refuse to do this and he shall die. What's the matter?' His exuberance was a tonic Stella's numb heart began to beat a little color to her lips, hope to her soul. Yet she did not speak, though she smiled.

"What is it, Miss Stella?" Alvin repeated. "You look as if you'd died and come back, though not all of you, There's awful things in-your face! "And in my heart, too, Alvin. Oh, Alvin, I-" She grew cold again, and was silent.

Tactful Alvin said nothing, but pushing a chair behind her pressed her gently into it. He did not release her hand, but stroked it softly, waiting for her to spenk. Suddenly she started up. This was the thirtleth, and-a week, the letter had said! And she did not know how far the answer was to go. Precious time had already been wasted. It was ages since she read those awful words. She must do something, tell some one, get help. Alvin! He was the one. She put the letter in his hand. "Read it, quick!" she commanded.

He complied, starting at the first words, then reading on quietly, through the postscript directions, and ending with a careful scrutiny of the en velone. Stella watched him anxiously wondering, even in her preoccupation at the maturity and wisdom that came into his face at emergency's call. "Oh Alvin, there must be some way be dde-beside obeying. How can I do that? Yet how can I be Alfred'smur-murderer?" She shuddered at the word.

"Perhaps this is only a threat from some enemy of Gideon's to get him

"Oh, no," Stella answered, remem bering the last look she had seen in Gideon's face. "I'm sure it-I'm sure Gideon knows of it." "Oh, pshaw, Miss Stella! Gid Ingram wouldn't do such a scurvy trick. "Alvin, you don't know. He has ried to make me marry him. He's crazy with jealousy. I know this letter s his work, that he means it!" Alvin reflected again. Suddenly his ace was illuminated. "There's a way, and it's sure-marry me!" "What? Alvin!" She half rose, angry that he could jest at such a moment. But, no, his face was serious. Yet it was too absurd, impossible! "Not really, of course, but so far as any one else knows. Elope with me to

Her eyes were big with astonish ment. Gradually his meaning dawned upon her, and the power to think.

The Message Was Cruel.

His daring idea was suggestive of another. "No, Alvin, not even to save Alfred Vincent could I do that. Suicide is cowardly, yet I'd rather kill myself than seem to be so fickle, to betray dear little Viola."

"Miss Stella, don't speak of suicide! And Viola'd know how it was, of course. But there's other ways, if you won't accept my offer." He smiled boyishly in spite of the tragic moment. "Yes, there's unother way; I shall disappear, just drop out of sight. And you'll help me, won't you? This very night?"

"Yes, indeed. This night is the only time I could do it, too. I'm to work nights after this." "Can you get me away secretly, Alvin? Have you any plan?" "Yes, I can fix it. I know a manhe's a friend of mine, and as close mouthed as a dumb one. I'll get his team and start you on your way to Sacram to, or to the Bay, as you cold. It stops the cough, heals think best. I'd say San Francisco; it's

She felt Stella tremble in her arms, "Don't be afeard, honey! You've got friends. Me'n Bill'll stand by ye. You've struck the only thing to do, I reckon. Stella stood erect and was silent.

The others watched her without speaking, waiting on her mood. At last she faced them. "This step changes all my life. Please tell Uncle Billy the-the best thing you can think of, Mrs. Sally," Stella said, the words coming slowly, as if she were thinking out her plan as she went. "From this time I shall caped her; but Sally B. saw her shoulders lift and tremble, and flew to her, comforting her with a love that Stella knew would never fail. When Alvin came at midnight the hotel was dark and silent. Not a glimmer of light came from behind the curtains where Sally B, watched with wet eyes while Stella drove away, her head turned toward that window as long as she could

The next morning Sally B. joined eager of the questioning gossips. And none who listened to her burid remarks: upon Stella's flight dreamed that her aching heart was following the solitary, fleeing girl.
